The property development division of the Jihlava-based company PSJ has established cooperation with the studio E-mrak, led by the architect Martin Rajniš. He is a key figure in the return of the construction industry back to nature and natural materials. “Living in satellite villages is not enough for people any more,” says Zdeněk Archleb, of PSJ. According to him, the social environment and the proximity of nature are important in residential construction more than ever. Nature-based architecture is nothing new in the world. For example Bill Gates, Microsoft’s boss, had his house built in a similar style.
